The indicated dimensions are measured based on the limits of the exterior walls and the center line of the common interior walls and in fact vary from the dimensions that would be determined using the description and definition of "Unit", established in the Declaration (which generally only includes interior airspace between perimeter walls and excludes interior structural components). Note that the room measurements set forth in this plan are generally taken at the largest points in each room (as if the room were a perfect rectangle), without taking cutouts into account. Therefore, the actual room area will typically be less than the product obtained by multiplying the indicated length by the width. All dimensions are approximate and may vary with actual construction, and all development and floor plans are subject to change
